Urban Renewal and Participation

Community participation has become a central topic in urban renewal research over the past two decades, and many scholars have examined how residents take part in decision making.

Existing studies are mostly single cases, and only a few of them try to compare participation across cities and outlines open questions.